

Promises Made, Promises Kept.

The Charlotte-Mecklenburg community is one of the fastest growing regions in the United States.

With that increased growth, Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools is preparing to meet the needs of every student. And when the citizens of Mecklenburg County approved funding to build new schools. CMS has a proven record of success in meeting the demand.

Schools are built to relieve overcrowding.

In the past decade CMS has constructed new schools all across the district creating additional classroom seats and reducing the number of mobile units on some campuses.

Schools like Grand Oak Elementary School, Rocky River High School and Stoney Creek Elementary School to name a few.

New schools are also built to replace old ones. Completed construction of these new schools helped us reduce the number of schools that are more than 50 years old.

Some of the replaced buildings that were more than 50 years old were schools like Statesville Road Elementary, Bain Elementary school and McIntock Middle School.

All of these new schools are built with a modern design that utilizes space, maximizing efficiencies and encourages teaching and learning in a 21st century school environment.

And all these schools were funded with tax-payer dollars, were built on time and were on budget.

Your bond dollars at work.
